A studio concerned with origins of the otherwise benign objects of the every day.

Ahhhhlluminim questions the role of aluminum as a domestic, military and industrial material over the course of the last 100 years, examining its historical influence, material production and resource extraction technologies the studio challenges how we perceive materials of every day. Using the decommissioned Alcoa aluminium smelter as the studios site of exploration, we will look backwards along its historical timeline whilst simultaneously looking backwards across the materials supply chain to question the implications of bauxite mining in Australia. What is aluminum, how is it used and where does it come from? Additionally students will be asked to question, what are its implications on environment, community and culture.
