

Dr Sandy Braaf

Long-term outcomes from serious injury

My research mainly involves qualitative methods to understand the long-term impacts of trauma and to identify gaps in service provision for people who have serious injuries.

Serious injury is a leading cause of mortality, morbidity and permanent disability worldwide. In the first 5-years after injury, many people experience pain, discomfort, impaired mobility, mental health issues, and difficulty returning to work. My research seek ways to improve trauma outcomes and service delivery to people with injuries.

Join my team on placement by emailing sandra.braaf@monash.edu

