

I can move when I feel
"disappointed"

The 'I can move when I feel...' stories were created to support children's learning about the benefits of movement for their social and emotional wellbeing. They teach children that moving can help us manage big feelings and emotions.

Moving is however just one strategy that can be used for emotion regulation and other strategies or support may be needed.

Sometimes I'm disappointed Sigh! Sigh!
when nothing goes to plan,
when special days get cancelled or rain gets out of hand.

I want to sit and sulk.
My heart feels sad and sore.

I cry, 'It's just not fair!'
I want to scream and roar.

But did you know...

moving can help us feel better?

We can move a bit
or we can move a lot.

We can walk on tip toes
or jump rope on the spot.

Even moving a little can make a BIG difference!

When we move, our brain makes special things called neurotransmitters. These can help us feel better.

Remember, any movement is good movement.

And you can always talk to your family, friends or teacher about how you are feeling.

What move do YOU like to do?
