The future of lawyering: Facing the big challenges in the 21st century

This panel brings together a number of professionals from across the legal sector to discuss the future of lawyering in Australia. The panellists will explore some of the big legal practice challenges of today, including graduate employment prospects in an increasingly crowded market. The panellists will also explore the global move towards ‘experiential’ and ‘work integrated learning’ and consider how this and other initiatives might help improve law students’ competitiveness in and preparedness for future employment.

The panel coincides with Law Week, as well as a visit to Monash Law School’s clinical legal education program by Professor Peter Joy of Washington State University. Professor Joy is visiting Monash with the support of the Sue Campbell Memorial Fund. He will share insights about relevant developments in North America and the possible implications of these for the Australian legal landscape.

Panellists:

- The Honourable Justice Shane Marshall (retired)
- Brind Zichy-Woinarski QC, Victorian Bar
- Ellie Mulholland, Lawyer, Allens; Supreme Court Prize winner
- Linda Rayment, CEO + Co-founder HTRAC The Human Trafficking Resource & Assistance Centre; LIV Young Lawyers President
- Professor Peter Joy, Washington University Law School and visiting scholar under the Sue Campbell Memorial Fund
