About ANDS

The Australian National Data Service (ANDS) is a partnership led by Monash University, working in collaboration with the Australian National University (ANU) and the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation (CSIRO). It is funded by the Australian Government through the National Collaborative Research Infrastructure Strategy (NCRIS).

ANDS' core purpose is to make Australia's research data assets more valuable for researchers, research institutions and the nation.

Since being formally established in 2008, ANDS has supported numerous research data projects around Australia. It has also been playing an important role in the international research data community.

ANDS' flagship service is the Research Data Australia discovery portal where you can find, access and reuse data for research from Australian research organisations, government agencies and cultural institutions.

Strategic partnership with RDS and Nectar

ANDS also works closely with NCRIS partners Research Data Services (RDS) and National eResearch Collaboration Tools and Resources project (Nectar).

The three organisations will be providing a number of coordinated services and joint events for the research community throughout 2017/18.

Statement to acknowledge use of ANDS content

ANDS encourages reuse of its resources for the purpose of promoting best practice in research data management, sharing and reuse, as well as building skills and capacity of Australia's research system.

ANDS publishes all its material under the Creative Commons 4.0 International Attribution Licence (often referred to as CC-BY). This means you are free to republish any of ANDS resources, in whole or in part, as long as you give appropriate attribution to ANDS as the content owner.

The following statement of attribution can be used when ANDS material is used:

"This material uses resources published by the Australian National Data Service (ANDS), licensed under the Creative Commons 4.0 International Attribution Licence. ANDS is supported by the Australian Government through the National Collaborative Research Infrastructure Strategy Program (NCRIS)."

Exceptions to reuse of ANDS content

Third party material is not always covered by a Creative Commons license, for example where ANDS has itself been granted permission to use an image owned by an individual or organisation. We will normally indicate third party material with appropriate attribution, and you must also seek reuse permission from the owner before reuse.

Acknowledgement in presentations

To acknowledge ANDS' support in presentations, please use this slide either at the start or the end of your presentation:

- ANDS funding acknowledgement slide (PPTX, 0.29 MB)

Acknowledgement in printed material

Acknowledgement statements should be included in printed materials associated with funded activity, such as:

- annual reports
- newsletters, brochures or posters
- multimedia
- conference programs, papers, presentations or posters
- media releases and speeches.

Using the ANDS logo

The ANDS logo can be used to acknowledge ANDS' contribution to a project. High quality logos, along with ANDS' Branding Identity Guidelines, can be downloaded from the Using our logo page.

The logo should be reproduced at a size that reasonably reflects ANDS' contribution. For example, if ANDS provided the majority of funds, its acknowledgement should receive prominence over other contributors.
