INTRODUCTION

Monash University Museum of Art is pleased to announce the Australian premiere of Hany Armanious: The Golden Thread, first presented in the Australian Pavilion at the 54th Venice Biennale in 2011, alongside a suite of new works and artist's book developed for MUMA. The first major exhibition of Hany Armanious' work in Melbourne, The Golden Thread will open the Museum's 2012 exhibition program from 1 February.

Born in Egypt in 1962 and migrating with his family to Australia six years later, Sydney-based Armanious was the sole Australian representative at the Venice Biennale in 2011. Hany Armanious: The Golden Thread was developed by the Australia Council, with Doug Hall AM as Commissioner, and Anne Ellegood as Curator. Armanious' critically acclaimed exhibition at Venice – arguably the most prestigious visual arts event on the international calendar – builds upon a burgeoning critical reception that has grown around the artist's work internationally over the past decade.

Examining the relationship between readymade and figurative sculptural traditions, The Golden Thread presents cast sculptural forms that are simultaneously archaic and modern, formal and informal, uncanny and concrete. Hany Armanious creates works that reveal the energy, sensation and perversity embedded within inanimate things. His interest in bringing 'nothingness into being', and exploring the passage between the mythical and the mundane, are just some of the complex twists and inversions that abound in his sculptures.

Anne Ellegood, Senior Curator at Los Angeles' Hammer Museum, characterises Armanious' sculptural installations as 'sites for creative production where the primordial urge to attempt to understand the mysteries of the world through the making of objects is honoured'.<sup>1</sup>

Surprisingly, for an artist who exhibits widely internationally, and who is cited as a significant influence to a generation of contemporary artists, there have been few opportunities to encounter Armanious' work in Melbourne. MUMA, with the support of the Australia Council, looks forward to presenting this major exhibition to Melbourne audiences.

Laura McLean-Ferris, The Independent:

'I enjoyed immensely the Australian contribution from Hany Armanious, whose sculptural casts of everyday items such as pinboards, plinths, Burger King crowns, and broken window blinds raise the prosaic into a moving aesthetic experience'.<sup>2</sup>

Sebastian Smee, The Monthly:

'...high art and all its associated intellectual glamour are placed here in the context of the most ordinary, the most expendable, the most ignored and despised objects. Cast in resin, everything is made equivalent, as if Australian egalitarianism had been transposed to the realm of aesthetics'.<sup>3</sup>

Roberta Smith, New York Times:

'the spare sculptures of the Egyptian-born, Sydney based artist Hany Armanious mix everyday objects and abstract forms and blur the line between found and made'.<sup>4</sup>

CATALOGUE AND ARTIST'S BOOK

Artist's book: Hany Armanious has developed an artist's book Prototypes to coincide with the MUMA premiere of The Golden Thread. A curious object in its own right, Prototypes is a compendium of the artist's key source images, and a series of propositions and insights into where and how we read sculpture.

Australian Pavilion Exhibition Catalogue: The Venice Biennale catalogue for Hany Armanious: The Golden Thread exhibition will be available; featuring essays by Anne Ellegood (curator), Michael Ned Holte, Alexander Dumbadze, Adam Jasper and an excerpt from a novel by Rachel Kushner.

Published by the Australia Council for the Arts on the occasion of the exhibition Hany Armanious: The Golden Thread, for the Australian Pavilion at the 54th Venice Biennale, 4 June – 27 November 2011, it features extensive colour plates of all works presented in Venice alongside related work of recent years.
