Mindfulness with compassion group research program update

This PhD project was introduced in the December 2016 Newsletter. We are pleased to report that recruitment for this project has now been completed so it is timely to provide an update.

To recap, young people between the ages of 15-25 who were experiencing psychotic symptoms and attending mental health services at either Monash Health or Alfred Health were invited to participate in a Mindfulness with Compassion group research program in the past year.

This group program was developed by Dr Tara Hickey (pictured), a clinical psychologist and PhD candidate at Southern Synergy, who has trained with the pioneers of mindfulness and compassion-based interventions in the US and Europe.

Tara developed the program to help young people mindfully pay attention to what they are experiencing and become their own best friend by making wise choices to care for themselves when they notice they are struggling. To find out more about the program theory and rationale see: Hickey, T., Nelson, & Meadows, G (2017). Application of a mindfulness and compassion-based approach to the at-risk mental state. Clinical Psychologist (Special Edition on Compassion) 21: 104-115.

Tara co-facilitated the groups with Ellen Kang, a Headspace clinician in Narre Warren. Thirty-one participants were recruited for the study with 18 receiving the intervention. Attendance was good at each of the groups (average number of sessions attended: 5) and the informal feedback was positive with only 2 participants dropping out of the program.

Tara is about to start another article for publication with a participant from the study. This article will describe the program and the participant’s experience. She plans to publish further articles with her supervisors, Professors Graham Meadows and Barnaby Nelson, reporting the quantitative and qualitative results.

“When unattended, our thinking runs our lives without our even knowing it. Attended with mindful awareness, we have a chance not only to know ourselves better, and see what is on our minds, but also to hold our thoughts differently, with greater wisdom, so they no longer rule our lives”

– Jon Kabat-Zinn
