DEVELOPING INNOVATIVE, RESEARCH- LED EDUCATIONAL TEACHING PLATFORMS

World history is a rapidly growing scholarly and teaching field in the humanities that seeks to understand the globalised and connected world in which we exist.

The Monash History program and Warwick Global History and Culture Centre have a long-standing relationship focused on delivering joint research and teaching in global history.

Seeking to foster innovative teaching platforms to improve the quality of learning opportunities offered to students, our Alliance enabled the development of the Global History Reader, a comprehensive set of resources designed to introduce students to global history.

The World History Association in the United States, which is comprised of hundreds of researchers and teachers, recognised the value of these resources and has funded their inclusion in a new international online global history teaching and research platform, World History Commons (www.worldhistorycommons.org).

Consisting of a range of components including World History Primers and teaching guides, the World History Commons platform will communicate the latest research while providing a wide array of indispensable resources that will transform the way world history is taught throughout the world.
